

This map of Minas Gerais, Brazil, illustrates the state's diverse geography and administrative structure. The state is divided into several regions, each color-coded: the north (pink), northeast (yellow), central (green), and south (blue). Major cities are marked with black dots, while smaller towns are indicated by white dots. The map shows a dense network of roads, with federal routes (BR) labeled in orange and state routes in blue. Notable geographical features include the Serra da Mantiqueira in the south, the Chapada Gaúcha in the north, and the Rio São Francisco flowing through the central and eastern parts of the state. The map also shows the state's borders with Goiás to the west, Bahia to the northeast, and São Paulo to the south. The capital, Belo Horizonte, is highlighted with a red star in the central-eastern region. The map is a detailed representation of the state's administrative and geographical layout.
