

A detailed map of the state of Paraíba, Brazil, illustrating its municipal divisions. The map uses color-coding to distinguish between different regions or groups of municipalities. Major cities are highlighted with black dots, while smaller towns are marked with open circles. A network of orange lines represents federal highways, many labeled with their respective numbers (e.g., BR-116, BR-226, BR-104). The map also shows the state's borders with Ceará to the northwest, Pernambuco to the northeast, and Rio Grande do Norte to the north. Neighboring countries, Colombia and Venezuela, are partially visible at the top left and right edges respectively. The capital, João Pessoa, is prominently marked with a red star in the eastern part of the state. Other significant urban centers like Campina Grande and Patos are clearly labeled. The map includes numerous smaller municipalities such as Sousa, Pombal, Monteiro, and Santa Rita, providing a comprehensive overview of the state's administrative geography.
